Market Update: Double Down on BZQ, EEV, SAN, RJA, and FXP Positions

Dear Subscribers

I believe that we are on the verge of the "next leg down" for the Euro Crisis.

This leg will be the big one. If you want to have an idea of what I mean, think back to August 2011:

This year's market action has followed this pattern very closely: an initial crisis in March followed by a summer rally into the fourth of July.

What comes next... is the cliff. It may hit in August or September (historically September is a common month for Crises) but what's coming will be BAD.

I realize that this flies in the face of what 99% of the media and analysts will tell you, but I am personally very VERY concerned that things are going to be getting very ugly VERY fast.

With that in mind, we should use this latest rally to average in on several of our positions. So I recommend the following:

Action to Take: Double Down on the UltraShort Brazil ETF (BZQ)

Action to Take: Double Down on the UltraShort Emerging Markets ETF (EEV)

Action to Take: Double Down on the Santander (SAN) SHORT

Action to Take: Double Down on Rogers Agricultural ETN (RJA) SHORT

Action to Take: Double Down on the UltraShort China ETF (FXP)

I am already working on next week's issue of Private Wealth Advisory. I can assure you in advance it will be unlike anything you've read before. I am going to lay out in clear, uncertain terms just what is happening in the banking system today.

By the time you finish reading it, you'll see exactly why I am so concerned.

Until then...

Best Regards,
